The end of the Cold War marked a significant shift in the global balance of power. With the collapse of the Soviet Union, the United States emerged as the world's sole superpower. At the same time, India and Israel began to play increasingly important roles in regional and global affairs.

The relationship between India and Israel has been complex and often fraught with tension. However, in recent years, the two countries have developed a close strategic partnership. This partnership is based on shared interests in security, counter-terrorism, and economic development.

The United States has also played a key role in shaping the relationship between India and Israel. The United States has been a major supplier of arms to both countries, and it has also provided diplomatic support for their security cooperation.

The trilateral relationship between India, Israel, and the United States is a complex and dynamic one. It is a relationship that is shaped by a variety of factors, including historical, political, and strategic considerations. This book examines the evolving relationships between these three countries in the post-Cold War world. It explores the factors that have shaped these relationships, and analyzes their implications for regional and global security.

Historical Background

The relationship between India and Israel has its roots in the early 20th century. Both countries were part of the British Empire, and they shared a common experience of colonialism.

After India gained independence in 1947, it established diplomatic relations with Israel. However, these relations were often strained due to India's support for the Palestinian cause.

In the 1990s, India began to reassess its relationship with Israel. This was due in part to the collapse of the Soviet Union, which had been India's main ally during the Cold War.

In 1992, India established full diplomatic relations with Israel. Since then, the two countries have developed a close strategic partnership.

Political Factors

The political relationship between India and Israel is based on shared interests in security, counter-terrorism, and economic development.

Both countries are facing threats from terrorism. India is concerned about terrorism from Pakistan-based groups, while Israel is concerned about terrorism from Hamas and Hezbollah.

India and Israel have cooperated on counter-terrorism measures. They have shared intelligence and conducted joint military exercises.

India and Israel are also cooperating on economic development. They have signed a number of agreements on trade and investment.

Strategic Factors

The strategic relationship between India and Israel is based on their shared concern about the rise of China.

China is India's largest neighbor, and it has been rapidly expanding its military presence in the Indian Ocean region.

Israel is also concerned about China's rise. China is a major arms supplier to Iran, which is Israel's main enemy.

India and Israel have cooperated on a number of strategic initiatives. They have conducted joint naval exercises, and they have exchanged intelligence on China.

Implications for Regional and Global Security

The trilateral relationship between India, Israel, and the United States has a number of implications for regional and global security.

First, the relationship helps to stabilize the Middle East. India and Israel are both important players in the region, and their cooperation helps to deter conflict.

Second, the relationship helps to counter the rise of China. India and Israel are both concerned about China's growing power, and their cooperation helps to balance China's influence in the region.

Third, the relationship helps to promote global security. India and Israel are both democracies, and they share a commitment to the rule of law and human rights. Their cooperation helps to promote these values around the world.

The trilateral relationship between India, Israel, and the United States is a complex and dynamic one. It is a relationship that is shaped by a variety of factors, including historical, political, and strategic considerations. This
