In her new book, Joy at the End of the Rainbow, Green shares her journey of rediscovering childhood through the eyes of her young daughter. Through heartwarming and inspiring stories, Green shows us how the simple things in life—like playing in the rain, building forts, and telling stories—can bring us immense joy.

Green also explores the importance of imagination and creativity in childhood. She argues that these qualities are essential for children's development and that they can also help adults reconnect with their inner child. Through her own experiences and the stories of others, Green shows us how imagination and creativity can lead to greater joy, happiness, and fulfillment.

Joy at the End of the Rainbow is a must-read for parents, grandparents, and anyone who wants to reconnect with their inner child. Green's writing is both heartwarming and inspiring, and her message is sure to resonate with readers of all ages.
