The Walkout

The walkout at Saint Augustine High School was sparked by a series of racist incidents, including the expulsion of a black student for wearing a Black Power button. The students had had enough, and they decided to take a stand. On October 24, 1968, they walked out of their classrooms and into the streets, chanting "Black Power" and "We Shall Overcome."

The walkout quickly turned into a riot. White mobs attacked the students, and the police did little to stop them. The riot lasted for sixteen minutes, and it left several people injured.

The Aftermath

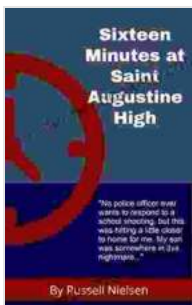

The riot at Saint Augustine High School had a profound impact on the city of New Orleans. It led to the desegregation of the city's schools, and it helped to galvanize the civil rights movement.

The students who participated in the walkout were hailed as heroes, and they went on to become leaders in the civil rights movement. Some of them went on to become politicians, judges, and activists. Others went on to work in education and social services. All of them made a difference in the world, and they continue to inspire us today.
