An Excerpt from The Lonesome Traveller

"I remember the day my wife died as if it were yesterday. I was at work when I got the call. I rushed to the hospital, but it was too late. She was gone."

"I was devastated. I couldn't believe that she was gone. We had been together for so many years, and I had always taken her for granted. I never thought that I would have to live without her."

"In the weeks and months that followed, I felt like I was living in a fog. I went through the motions of life, but I didn't really feel anything. I was just existing, not living."

"But even in my darkest moments, I knew that I had to find a way to keep going. I had to find a way to heal my broken heart."

"I started by talking to my family and friends. I told them how I was feeling, and they listened without judgment. They offered me their support and their love, and they helped me to start to rebuild my life."

"I also started to write. I wrote about my wife, about our life together, and about my grief. Writing helped me to process my emotions and to make sense of what had happened."

"The healing process was long and difficult, but I eventually found my way back to life. I found joy again, and I found love again. I will never forget my wife, but I know that she would want me to be happy."
