Witnessing the Devastation of Homs

Homs, once a vibrant city, had become a battleground in the Syrian Civil War. Colvin and her photographer, Paul Conroy, risked their lives to enter the city and document the suffering of its people. They witnessed firsthand the relentless bombing and the horrors inflicted on civilians, including children. Colvin's vivid dispatches painted a harrowing picture of the human toll of war.

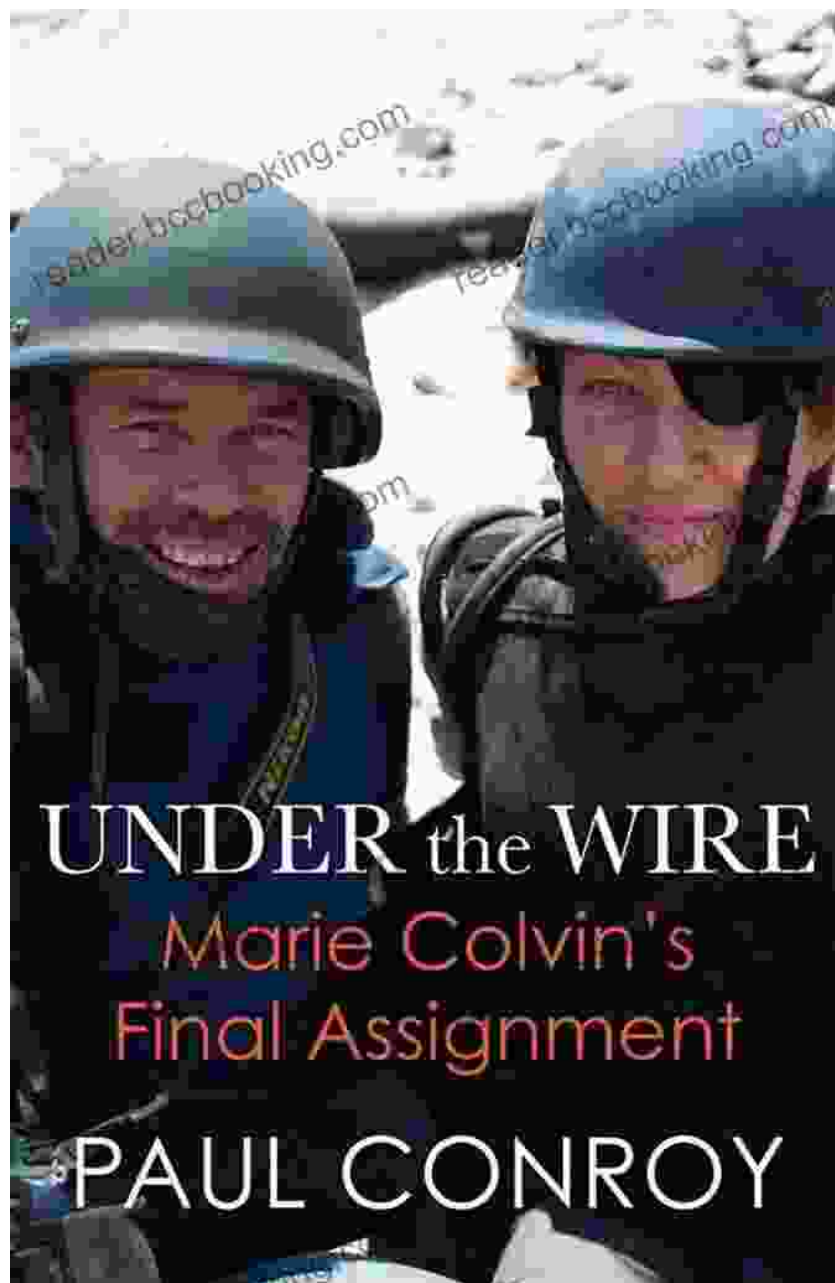

A Tragic End

On February 22, 2012, Colvin and Conroy were killed in a government artillery attack. Their sacrifice became a symbol of the dangers faced by journalists who strive to uncover the truth in conflict zones. Colvin's legacy lives on through her powerful reporting and her unyielding determination to hold those in power accountable.

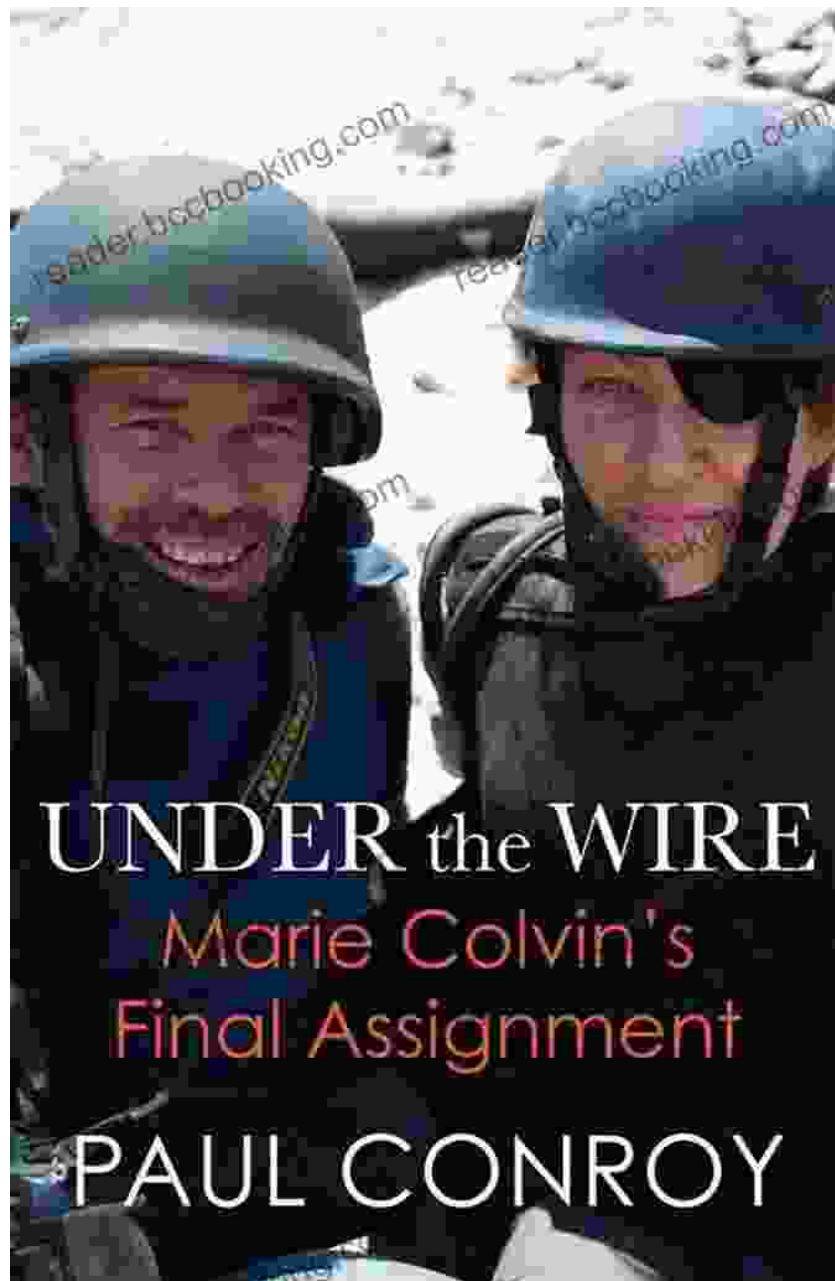

A Gripping Narrative

"Under the Wire: Marie Colvin's Final Assignment" is an immersive and gripping account of Colvin's final days. The book, written by Lindsey Hilsum, a close friend and fellow war correspondent, sheds light on Colvin's exceptional bravery, tenacity, and unwavering commitment to journalism.

A Must-Read for Students, Historians, and Journalists
